Guy Palmer Merrill's Interior Hunter is an exhibition of new artwork coming to Threshold Gallery at Mithun, opening April 6. Using digital photography, Merrill samples his surroundings, deconstructing elements of the built and natural environment which are then recombined in collage and painting. Remnants of a demolished building fill a plaza as if strange geology had abruptly taken place. Pathways cut through landscapes, creating portals to different realms. The membrane between interior and exterior is dissolved, and an interconnected system forms in its place. Human figures and Merrill's sculptural experiments are also present — either in or outside the frame, as observers or inhabitants.

Guy Palmer Merrill is a visual artist and musician. He has exhibited at J. Rinehart Gallery, Tacoma Art Museum, The Alice, and Fred Wildlife Refuge. Merrill received his art degree from Western Washington University and lives in Seattle, WA.
